FROG LEGS LIP

A busboy with a split lip ate some frog legs he found on the side of the road. The frog legs got stuck in the lip hole and all the waiters called him Frog Legs Lip.

The full potential became a weapon and the child who reached for it used it to commit suicide instead of getting into show business.

It was destiny that all the future sports would end in ties. But it wasn't until they started keeping score by collecting opponents' toes that sports reached 100% popularity and all movies and TV shows were cancelled.

When the actor asked the director what his motivation should be the director said, “use the energy of this baby hippopotamus.” The actor took the baby hippopotamus but when he put it to his mouth he realized it was a live squirrel and the director said, “action!”

Frog Legs Lip didn't want to be a busboy forever so he started his own restaurant called Frog Leg Lips which didn't serve food but self-help advice which basically amounted to how not to end up eating frog legs off the street with a split lip.

All of the frog legs people eat are from the same frog, the only frog in the world who can regenerate its limbs. This frog is named Doorknob.

Every person who commits suicide enters an alternate dimension which is exactly the same as the dimension they were trying to escape only they are still alive. Their ghost gets to stay in the original dimension and live forever, free of any emotion. Frog Legs Lip was one of these ghosts. One day, Frog Legs Lip took a trip down to the river so he could pee in it when he accidentally peed on Doorknob's head. Doorknob was so mad that he decided that he would never regenerate frog legs again.

The actor couldn't say his lines because he had a live squirrel in his mouth. He was fired from the movie but it didn't matter. This was the same day that sports decided to use toes instead of points so every actor was fired.

The last frog legs left on the planet were the ones stuck in Frog Legs Lip's lip hole. Frog Legs Lip decided to give the frog legs to the person who gave him the split lip in the first place.

The director heard a knock on his door and answered it. The person who was knocking was the busboy he had punched in the face a few weeks earlier. He had punched the busboy in the face because he had tried to pitch him a movie idea while he was eating. The busboy said, "I don't know if you remember me but I was the busboy you punched in the face a few weeks ago." The busboy paused. "I'm not a busboy anymore," he said, removing the frog legs from his lip and handing them to the director.

“I think I would like to be an actor,” Frog Legs Lip told the director. The director looked at the frog legs he had been handed and walked over to the kitchen where he placed them in a large bowl of pepperoni pudding.

In Middleville, Michigan, the home team VCR Repairmen were down by four toes with just over five minutes to go in the contest. So the visiting Dolphin Scientists from Shedd, Oregon played loosely, with their toes in plain sight, so the game would end in a tie. The last time a game didn't end in a tie, there was a riot in Prosperity, Florida that led to the death of every mailman.

“I worry,” the director said, as he clicked the channel to a different game, “that the world will run out of players with toes.” He fingered a frog leg in the pepperoni pudding and gave it a sniff. “Not ready yet.”

The actor couldn't get the live squirrel out of his mouth but it didn't matter because he was still unemployed.

When the director thought they were ready, he pulled the frog legs out of the pepperoni pudding and gave them a lick. He felt a strange sensation in both of his feet.

It had been years since the frog legs started marinating. Riots were taking place all over the country because all the toes were gone and sports were over.

The actor was wandering around Los Angeles with the same live squirrel in his mouth. He had been sequestered for sports a year earlier and had become one its most popular athletes. He held onto his toes for a long time and everyone called him Live Squirrel Mouth.

It hurt to wander without any toes but it felt good when a stranger would say, “hey, you’re Live Squirrel Mouth!”

Before they ran out of athletes with toes, most of the children in America rebelled against sports.
They did a mass-suicide and their ghosts started wrecking things from coast to coast.

The director started growing toes out of every part of his feet.
He had over two dozen toes on each foot.
He told Frog Legs Lip that his name was Dennis now and that he should leave.

Dennis walked aimlessly on the streets until he ran into Live Squirrel Mouth, his favorite player of sports. He said, “hey, you’re Live Squirrel Mouth!”

The director started to recruit all of the ghost children to join an army. He showed off his many toes to woo them.

The director was going to bring back movies starring the ghost children. After sports went away, there was no more entertainment.

Dennis and Live Squirrel Mouth looked at each other and it felt like they were both staring into a mirror. They wondered if they were long lost twins.

They talked for hours and then for days and then for weeks and then for months. By the time they were done talking, the director and the ghost children had brought back movies and movies were playing everywhere. There were movies playing on the faces of every human, beamed down via satellite. The ghost children were terrific actors.

Everyone settled on somebody else to look at and watch the movies off of their face.

The director smiled from his penthouse as he clipped all the toenails on his many toes.

Dennis watched the movie on Live Squirrel Mouth's face and started getting a little bored. He said, "what's your real name?" He tried to say it louder. "What's your real name?" He tried to say it louder. "Can I call you Dennis?" Live Squirrel Mouth, who used to be an actor, whispered, "please be quiet. I'm trying to watch the movie."
